

What immigration policies of the previous administration directly caused the policies needed today

◆ Show thinking ▾

To understand how the current immigration landscape took shape, it's helpful to look at the specific policy shifts between the Biden-Harris administration (2021–2025) and the current Trump administration (2025–Present).

The current administration often frames its restrictive measures as a necessary "correction" to what it characterizes as the "open border" policies of the previous term. Conversely, former officials argue their policies were an attempt to manage unprecedented global
